For many women, an orgasm is a battlefield. Difficulty reaching orgasm is the second most common sexual complaint reported. Those with these difficulties often feel sexually broken, unlovable and dysfunctional. Nevertheless, women with orgasmic difficulties can be successfully treated.

Marelize Swart is a psychologist and sex therapist with more than 20 years of international experience in individual, couples and sex therapy. She is the current resident sexologist for SA's Health SA Forum and for Drum Magazine

This presentation will provide an overview on the incidence, causes and assessment of orgasmic difficulties in women and outline various treatment approaches.
